Summary of Expert Opinion:

Based on my review of Dr. Julian's forensic psychological evaluation report and my review of other collateral materials, including her interview notes and her deposition transcript, I believe that Dr. Julian's evaluation methods do not provide a clear or trustworthy foundation to support her conclusions. In my opinion, Dr. Julian's conclusions are overly subjective and not based on scientific or generally accepted forensic methods.

In sum, Dr. Julian's forensic evaluation lacks in two material areas:

1. Dr. Julian did not adequately use scientifically based test data or other methods that reflect generally accepted procedures for forensic evaluations;
2. Since Dr. Julian's evaluation conclusion that all the plaintiffs in this matter are diagnosed with PTSD subsequent to events experienced during their employment at Shipley Do-Nut arose from her compromised methods, her conclusions are overly subjective and, thus, lack reliable foundation.

Description of Dr. Julian's Evaluation Methodology:

In addition to a review of the records provided to Dr. Julian, she reported that the method used for evaluation in this case was the structured clinical interview. Dr. Julian testified that the use of a structured interview by an experienced clinician such as herself yields the best results in the matter of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). Dr. Julian testified that a structured clinical interview is not an instrument but rather a clinician asking the same questions each time for each of the plaintiffs while allowing the person being evaluated some latitude in explaining their answers. She testified that she did not use any particular, formally published, printed instrument. She likened such structured clinical interview instruments to a checklist. She testified that she "used the questions that would appear most commonly, and then I just kind of flavored them up a little so I had them simple for them." (Julian Deposition, p. 41) Dr. Julian testified that she had no record of the questions that she asked each of the plaintiffs. She also testified that she utilized an interpreter in her interviews, which reduced the amount of actual interview time with the plaintiffs by one-half.

Dr. Julian testified that she did not use psychological testing in her evaluation methodology because it is somehow inappropriate in this case. Dr. Julian's testimony also included the following: "But, most of all, in doing a report for the court where you don't want to do a lot of unnecessary testing. You don't want to, you know, use tests that may or may not be helpful. The very best thing, when you have a lot of experience like I do, 22 years—no, more than that, 23 years of doing this—is to use the structured interview to gather data and kind of get a sense, because we need a chance to be flexible and to listen." (Julian Deposition, p. 31) She further testified that if she had been asked to conduct a clinical evaluation for the purposes of treatment, she would have conducted psychological testing using tests such as the Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory, 2nd Edition (MMPI-2). She also admitted that the MMPI-2 has been translated to Spanish.

Dr. Julian testified that her evaluation methodology did not include a complete clinical history of the plaintiffs because "that's not appropriate in a situation like this." (Julian Deposition, p. 62) She further testified that taking a clinical history of the plaintiffs was not appropriate because she was not answering a clinical question for the court, and it would be a form of "over billing lawyers." (Julian Deposition, p. 63) Dr. Julian also testified that her understanding is that taking a thorough clinical history was not warranted in this matter because in Texas law follows the "eggshell skull case" where "you take people as you find them when you hired them." (Julian Deposition, p. 63)

Description of Dr. Julian's Opinions:

The plaintiffs in this matter were referred by Rhonda Wills (former co-counsel) to Dr. Julian on February 26, 2007 to arrive at expert opinions including but not limited to "psychological and mental anguish of Plaintiffs, mental anguish damages of Plaintiffs, human resource development, and ethnic and gender impact in this matter." (Wills Letter, p. 1) The expert opinions expressed in this report will not concern human resource development as this area is outside my areas of expertise. Dr. Julian issued a preliminary report on February 28, 2007. She submitted her final report on June 18, 2007. Dr. Julian concluded in her preliminary report that given her review of the information available to her, "a diagnosis of PTSD may be safely assumed" for all the plaintiffs in this matter. In a cover letter attached to her preliminary report, Dr. Julian wrote the following to the plaintiffs' attorneys: "I anticipate that I will be conducting more interviews and reviewing more documents as the case proceeds. However, I have reviewed enough materials and visited with your clients sufficiently to form a preliminary position. I do anticipate expanding and enriching these opinions before trial. I do not, however, foresee a significant change in the nature of these opinions." In her final report issued on June 18, 2007, Dr. Julian remained somewhat tentative in her opinions regarding her diagnoses of the plaintiffs. She stated, "The Plaintiff's fear for their lives and safety sets the stage for a Post-Traumatic Stress (PTSD) diagnosis." (Julian Final Report, p. 8) However, Dr. Julian testified in her deposition of June 22, 2007 that to a reasonable degree of psychological certainty, all 12 plaintiffs have PTSD based on the DSM-IV-TR.¹ In a cover letter attached to her final report, Dr. Julian wrote the following to the plaintiffs' attorneys, "This report, after lengthy interviews with your clients and an extensive review of materials, represents the opinions I intend to state in court. However, I believe that every professional of integrity must restate that they are not closed to new data. I do anticipate expanding and enriching these opinions as my familiarity with the clients grows before trial. I do not, however, based on my current fact finding, foresee any significant change in the nature of these opinions."

Review of Dr. Julian's Forensic Evaluation:

The remainder of this report will explain the basis of my opinion about the deficiencies in Dr. Julian's forensic evaluation of the plaintiffs and the reasons I believe these deficiencies seriously compromise the reliability and trustworthiness of Dr. Julian's conclusions.

1. Dr. Julian's methodology failed to: (a) use generally accepted and scientifically-based psychological tests to substantiate PTSD; (b) objectively test the plaintiff's symptoms, (c) provide critical error rates, and (d) assess the response style of the plaintiffs.

The generally accepted method for the evaluation of PTSD is one that includes scientifically based psychological tests that include psychometric data or error rates. For example, Keane recommends the use of multiple sources in the assessment of PTSD in litigation contexts, including taking a comprehensive history, a structured clinical interview, the use of general personality tests, the administration of specific tests that measure PTSD and its associated clinical features.² The use of general personality tests such as the MMPI-2 serves several purposes including: (1) to provide information on functioning more broadly; (2) to allow for the calculation of PTSD subscales that corroborate PTSD symptoms (e.g., Keane PK Scale); and, (3) to assess the response style of the plaintiff (i.e., styles that range from symptom minimization to valid profiles to symptom exaggeration). In a forensic evaluation, the assessment of response style is a best practice; the issues of deliberate fabrication and unconscious exaggeration are critical to address when the consequences of the evaluation include external incentives such as compensation. Other similar tests that objectively substantiate PTSD symptoms include the Millon Multiaxial Personality Inventory-Third Edition (MCMI-III) and the Personality Assessment Inventory. Both the MMPI-2 and the MCMI-III are available in Spanish.

More than 20 standardized PTSD measures have been peer-reviewed and are generally accepted in the scientific community.³ Several of these instruments are appropriate for possible use in an evaluation such as the one Dr. Julian conducted including: (1) Revised Civilian Mississippi Scale; (2) Trauma Stress Schedule; (3) Trauma Symptom Inventory; (4) Detailed Assessment of Posttraumatic Stress; (5) Posttraumatic Stress Diagnostic Scale. The Revised Civilian Mississippi Scale and the Trauma Stress Schedule are of particular usefulness in this matter since equivalent Spanish language versions have been developed for these instruments.

2. Dr. Julian's interview notes and deposition testimony do not document or support the use of a structured clinical interview for the determination of PTSD with the plaintiffs.

Dr. Julian reported that the method used for evaluation in this case was the structured clinical interview. She testified that a structured interview is not an instrument but rather a clinician asking the same questions each time for each of the plaintiffs while allowing the person being evaluated some latitude in explaining their answers. She testified that she did not use any particular, formally published, printed instrument. She likened such structured clinical interview instruments to a checklist. She testified that she "used the questions that would appear most commonly, and then I just kind of flavored them up a little so I had them simple for them." (Julian Deposition, p. 41) Dr. Julian testified that she had no record of the questions that she asked each of the plaintiffs. As reflected in her notes and report of evaluation, Dr. Julian did not use a structured clinical interview. Rather, it appears that she used a very unstructured and subjective clinical interview. Her clinical notes consist of less than one page per plaintiff that reflect no specific questions posed in no specific order. The purpose of a structured clinical interview is to provide standardization and objective questioning. Weiss (1997) describes a structured clinical interview as "a formalized interview process or procedure that has internally logical or consistent rules that govern the content of questions asked of an interviewee, the order in which the topics are covered, and the specific kind of information sought."⁴

There are several appropriate structured clinical interviews for PTSD that are generally accepted, peer-reviewed, and tested for error rates. Foremost among these are the: (1) Structured Clinical Interview for DSM-IV; and, (2) Clinician-Administered PTSD Scale (CAPS). The CAPS was developed at the National Center for PTSD and is considered the "gold standard" for the assessment of PTSD. It is a 30-item structured interview that corresponds to the DSM-IV diagnostic criteria for PTSD. The CAPS allows for the precise measurement of both the frequency and intensity of PTSD symptoms. The questions are carefully worded, and the results are analyzed with logical and consistent rules.

3. Based on the Dr. Julian's interview notes and her deposition testimony, the interview protocol utilized in the evaluation of the plaintiffs in this matter was seriously inadequate in several regards. Dr. Julian's subjective interview in this matter has not been peer-reviewed and remains untested. Without a record of the questions posed to the plaintiff, one cannot determine if key areas of inquiry were covered or whether or not the interview questions were leading.

Dr. Julian's clinical interview appeared to be limited to a relatively brief elicitation of the plaintiff's self-report of PTSD symptoms without any substantive behavioral observations or even a simple mental status examination. Applicable professional standards require more than the stand-alone self-report of the plaintiff to arrive at a reliable opinion. PTSD symptoms elicited by an unstructured and wholly subjective clinical interview that are not substantiated by objective testing or careful collateral interviews results in an analytical gap between method and conclusion too large to leap.

Most importantly, Dr. Julian intentionally omitted from the interview protocol taking a life history of each of the plaintiffs due to her opinion that it is inappropriate to obtain a comprehensive life history in a forensic evaluation. She testified that taking such a history is only appropriate in a clinical evaluation conducted with the purpose of providing treatment. The results of this omission include the absence of clinical data concerning pre-existing or contributing conditions as well as any possible falsification data regarding the diagnosis of PTSD.

5. In my opinion, Dr. Julian's testimony appears to reflect a lack of understanding of the function of a forensic evaluation and of the role of an expert witness versus that of a fact witness.

Dr. Julian testifies that her methodology is based on her role as an expert witness and not that of a fact witness. I agree that the two are different roles, and that a treating doctor's role as a fact witness is very different from that of a forensic mental health evaluator serving as an expert witness. However, I disagree that the differences between the two dictate that the forensic evaluator do a less thorough job than the treating doctor. I disagree that the forensic mental health evaluator omit important methodological components of an evaluation such as the administration of psychological testing and the taking of a comprehensive life history of the plaintiff. These methods are as critical for a generally accepted and reliable forensic evaluation as they are for a treatment-oriented clinical evaluation. In a case such as this one, the forensic evaluator is conducting a clinical evaluation for the court that is tailored to address the relevant psycholegal issues. Forensic evaluations do not omit important clinical methods just because they are clinical. Forensic evaluations are comprehensive and responsive to the needs of the court rather than to the treatment needs of the individual being evaluated.

6. A key methodological mindset in forensic evaluations is to gather data on which to consider reliable and plausible alternative explanations for the data. Dr. Julian apparently made no attempts to explore other factors that may have caused or contributed to the PTSD symptoms self-reported by the plaintiffs.

Potentially, some of the plaintiffs in this matter may have experienced traumatic stressors at another time or place in their lives. Dr. Julian made no attempt to rule-out this possibility. Some of the reported symptoms could be caused by pre-existing and non-traumatic emotional, mental, or personality disorders. Considering the fact that these evaluations are taking place in a litigation context, the possibility of financial incentives is a concern. Dr. Julian's report does not indicate that she considered the accuracy of the plaintiff's descriptions of the stressor events. For example, her report does not suggest that she considered the deposition data of defense witnesses including Shipley Do-Nut owners, managers, or non-plaintiff employees. If the answer to this question is that she cannot completely trust the self-report of such individuals, then the basis for completing accepting the self-report of the plaintiffs is questionable. In a number of other instances Dr. Julian's analyses appears idiosyncratic. For example, see her comparison of stressors (Julian Deposition, p. 84), her assessment of the degree of severity in stressors (Julian Deposition, p. 85), her application of the concept of Stockholm Syndrome (Julian Deposition, p. 124), and in her dismissal of the lack of avoidance behavior (Julian Deposition, p. 126).

7. Dr. Julian's methodology of evaluation does not account for ruling out confirmation bias, and, in fact, her reports of evaluation suggest the presence of a confirmation bias in operation.

After a one-hour group telephone call with the plaintiffs through an interpreter, Dr. Julian concluded in her preliminary report that given her review of the information available to her, "a diagnosis of PTSD may be safely assumed" for all the plaintiffs in this matter. At that time, Dr. Julian also wrote that she did not "foresee a significant change in the nature of these opinions." After relatively brief individual interviews with the plaintiffs, Dr. Julian remained convinced that all the plaintiffs had PTSD and that, even though she would remain open to new data, she did not "foresee any significant change in the nature of these opinions."

Dr. Julian's records and deposition testimony do not reflect any systematic attempt to perform any quality control on her preliminary opinions. Other data was made available to her including information that should have been explored with the plaintiffs in her individual interviews with them as one way of systematically dealing with potential confirmation bias. This data includes: (1) many of the plaintiffs continue to work at Shipley Do-Nut; (2) several of the plaintiffs have recommended their relatives for jobs at Shipley Do-Nut; (3) several non-plaintiff employees have testified about what their perceptions of events that allegedly happened on-the-job at Shipley Do-Nut that is in opposition to testimony of several of the plaintiffs. No evidence of inquiry such as this was found in the records provided to me for review.

8. Dr. Julian's conclusion opinion that all twelve of the plaintiffs in this matter developed PTSD based on their treatment at Shipley Do-nut is extremely difficult to reconcile with generally accepted, peer-reviewed scientific studies that have demonstrated that the majority of survivors of documented trauma do not develop PTSD.⁵

For example, The 1996 Detroit Area Survey of Trauma revealed that the average conditional risk of PTSD following exposure to trauma ranges from 9.2% to 20.9%.⁶ If the probability for 1 person to protract PTSD is 20.9%, and two people are exposed, the probability that both will have PTSD is 4%. If three people are exposed, the probability that all will have PTSD is 1%. If five people are exposed, the probability that all will have PTSD is 0.04%. If twelve people are exposed, the probability that all will have PTSD is 0.000000007%. If the probability for 1 person to protract PTSD is 9.2%, and two people are exposed, the probability that both will have PTSD is 1%. If three people are exposed, the probability that all will have PTSD is 0.08%. If four people are exposed, the probability that all will have PTSD is 0.007%. If twelve people are exposed, the probability that all will have PTSD is 0.0000000000004%.

9. In sum, opinions and methodology are not entirely distinct from one another. Opinion evidence, "which is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert", is overly subjective and, thus lacks reliable foundation.

Dr. Julian's methodology does not comport with generally accepted and applicable professional standards of forensic mental health evaluations. She included no objective psychological testing. She did not use a recommended structured clinical interview. She documents no systematic consideration of plausible alternative explanations for her data or of possible confirmation bias in her work in this case. In my opinion, Dr. Julian's methodology does not provide a reliable or trustworthy foundation for her opinion that any of the plaintiffs in this matter suffer from PTSD—much less that all twelve of the plaintiffs in this matter suffer from PTSD—an opinion that defies all scientific odds.
